

MICROCOSM AND MEDIATOR

THE THEOLOGICAL ANTHROPOLOGY OF MAXIMUS THE CONFESSOR

LARS THUNBERG

Fr. Louis Merton

in deep respect from the Author

✓✓✓
LARS THUNBERG

MICROCOSM AND MEDIATOR

THE THEOLOGICAL ANTHROPOLOGY

OF MAXIMUS THE CONFESSOR

C.W.K. GLEERUP LUND
EJNAR MUNKSGAARD COPENHAGEN
LUND 1965

The English revised by
A. M. ALLCHIN, Oxford

On the cover

The Heavenly Hierarchy, 16th Century
Russian icon of the Moscow School
(The Aschberg Collection, National-museum, Stockholm. Published by kind permission of the Museum)

Printed in Sweden by
Håkan Ohlssons Boktryckeri
Lund 1965

Contents

Introduction	1
1. Life of the Saint	1
2. Maximus' historical and theological importance	7
3. Earlier research and the purpose of the thesis	13

CHAPTER I. THE CHRISTOLOGICAL BACKGROUND

A. The Chalcedonian Heritage and Maximus' Theology of the Incarnation	21
B. Maximus and the Neo-Chalcedonian Position	37
1. The position of Cyril of Alexandria in Maximus' writings	41
2. Positive evaluation of Cyril's expression "one incarnate nature of the God Logos"	43
3. The expressions "one nature" and "two natures", correctly understood, are complementary to each other	44
4. Hypostatic and "synthetic" union	45
5. Christ is said to be not only "in duabus naturis" but also "ex duabus naturis"	46
6. "One energy"	47
7. The concept of hypostasis	49

CHAPTER II. THE COSMOLOGICAL CONTEXT

1. The creatio ex nihilo idea and other expressions of the aspect of differentiation within creation	52
The basic gulf	53
Διαφορά, difference	54
Διαιρέσεις, division	58
Διάστασις-διάστημα, distance and separation	60
Διαστολή, distinction, expansion	63
Other terms	64
2. Creation because of God's will	67
3. Creation because of God's benevolence. The concept of providence and judgment	69
4. Creation by the Word	76
The λόγοι of a differentiated creation reflect together the purpose of the Creator	77
The λόγοι, pre-existent in God, are held together by the Logos	80
The λόγοι of creation are intimately connected with the λόγοι of the economy of salvation and of Christ's Incarnation in the flesh	81
5. Creation on the basis of God's prudence	84

6. Creation—an act of divine condescension, which introduces the element of motion	85
7. Every creature is composite of substance and accident	88
The concept of substance	88
The concept of "nature"	92
8. Creation, not only of qualities but of qualified substances, which are, however, in need of divine Providence	95

CHAPTER III. MAXIMUS' ANTHROPOLOGY IN GENERAL

A. The Constitution and Position of Man	100
1. The unity of body and soul	100
Co-existence of body and soul	100
Body and soul as a composite nature and a complete species	103
The analogy between the unity of body and soul in man and the unity of divine and human nature in Christ	106
2. Human trichotomy	110
Human hypostasis	110
Mind, soul and body	113
3. The Image of God in Man	120
The place of the Image of God	120
Freedom and the divine Image	125
Dominion and the divine Image	127
4. From Image to Likeness	127
The background of Maximus' distinction	128
Reasons for rejection and acceptance of the distinction	131
Maximus' personal understanding of the distinction	133
Additional note: Imago Trinitatis	137
5. Microcosm and mediator	140
Man as microcosm in the tradition before Maximus	140
Man as both microcosm and mediator in Nemesisius	144
Maximus and man's middle position	145
Man the mediator	150
B. The Fall of Man and Its Consequences	152
1. Adam and the original state of man	152
The excellency of the primitive state	152
The idea of a double creation in Maximus' predecessors	155
The "garments of skin"	159
Maximus and the concept of a double creation	161
Maximus and the "garments of skin"	163
2. Adam's fall and its causes	164
Man's fault and the Devil's seduction	164
The dialectic of pleasure and pain	166
3. Consequences of the fall	169
Laws of pleasure and destruction	169
Three fundamental evils	170

4. The trees of Paradise	172
Earlier Christian interpretations	172
Maximus' interpretation.	174

CHAPTER IV. SOME ELEMENTS OF MAXIMUS' PSYCHOLOGY

A. The Trichotomy of the Soul	179
1. The human soul and the basic dichotomy	180
2. Different forms of 'trichotomist' psychology in Maximus	184
3. The general background of Maximus' dominant psychological trichotomy	187
Plato's position	187
Aristotle's understanding	190
The Stoic view	191
Later modifications	192
Philo and Clement—the earlier Alexandrian position	195
Origen's view—a more elaborated standpoint	198
Evagrius and later Origenism	199
The Cappadocian Fathers and the trichotomy	202
Nemesius and Ps.-Denis—a more positive approach.	203
4. The trichotomy and Maximus' allegorical Scripture interpretations	206
The negative aspect of disintegration through the trichotomy	207
The positive or neutral aspect of unity in trichotomy	209
5. The trichotomy and human differentiation	210
The concupiscible element in human differentiation.	211
The irascible element in differentiation	213
The rational element in differentiation	215
6. The trichotomy and the mind in human unity and unification	217
B. The Psychology of the Will	220
1. Will, mind and human nature	221
Reason and will in human nature	222
The mind and man's use of his self-determinative nature	224
2. Γνώμη—an ambiguous term	226
Its use before Maximus	226
Its note of ambiguity in Maximus' understanding	227
Γνώμη and the aspect of differentiation	229
3. Stages of volitional activity	231
The wish	232
The enquiry	233
Consideration and deliberation	234
The judgment	235
The choice	236
The decisive impulse	237
The action	239
4. Fall and restoration of the human will	239
The individual will in man's fall and restoration	240
Unification of will	241

CHAPTER V. ESTABLISHING THE MICROCOSM

A. Disintegration through the Passions	244
1. Self-love—mother of vices and passions	244
The position of self-love in the theology of Maximus' predecessors	246
A Western parallel—Augustine's evaluation of self-love	250
Self-love as sensuality and pride in Maximus' predecessors	252
A similar understanding in the tradition influenced by Maximus	256
Self-love as love for the body in Maximus' understanding	257
Maximus and the Eastern alternative	260
Negative and positive self-love	261
2. The Evagrian hierarchy of eight vices and Maximus' differentiations of vices	262
The context and roots of the idea of the eight cardinal vices according to earlier research	264
The idea of the trichotomy of the soul as background to the hierarchy	265
Examples of 'trichotomist' differentiation between the vices in Evagrius	268
Examples of 'trichotomist' differentiation in the later Evagrian tradi- tion	269
The later history of the Evagrian hierarchy and Maximus' list of vices	271
3. The trichotomy of the soul and the work of passions in general	274
'Trichotomist' and other principles of differentiation among the vices	274
Direct references to the whole trichotomy	276
Direct references to the dichotomy of the passible part of the soul	278
Indirect or implicit references to the trichotomy	279
4. The 'trichotomist' understanding of the separate vices	283
Gluttony (γαστριμαργία).	283
Fornication (πορνεία).	284
Avarice (φιλαργυρία).	286
Grief (λύπη) and wrath (ὀργή).	287
Listlessness (ἀκηδία).	289
Vainglory (κενοδοξία).	290
Pride (ὕπερηφάνια).	291
5. The double commandment of love and the disintegrating effect of the passions	294
Human passions and vices as the cause of a double separation	295
The double commandment of love as a principle of distinction be- tween human passions and vices	298
The double perspective of self-love	300
B. Re-integration through the Virtues	301
1. Hierarchies of virtues compared with the hierarchies of vices	302
Maximus and the Evagrian hierarchy of virtues	303
The character of the correspondence between the hierarchies of vices and virtues	304
Other enumerations of virtues and the problem of their correspon- dence to the vices	306

2. Correspondences between virtues and vices as seen in a 'trichotomist' perspective	307
'Trichotomist' differentiations of virtues in Evagrius	308
'Trichotomist' and 'dichotomist' differentiations of virtues in Maximus	309
The correspondence between individual vices and virtues in the Evagrian tradition	311
The correspondence between individual vices and virtues in Maximus	312
Maximus' critical attitude to a mere correspondence between vices and virtues	315
3. The state of detachment	317
The concept of detachment in some of Maximus' predecessors	317
Evagrius' view of detachment	319
Maximus' view of detachment and the Evagrian influence	322
An inner transformation of the concept of detachment	324
4. Love—the integrating factor	327
Charity as the inclusive summit of all the virtues	327
The double dimension of charity and the life of virtues	330
The double commandment of love and Maximus' 'trichotomist' understanding of the virtues	333
Charity in relation to faith and hope as agents of deification	336
Charity and knowledge	340
5. Divine incarnation in the virtues	342
The idea of an incarnation of Christ in the virtues in Maximus' predecessors	343
Maximus' general understanding of Christ's inhabitation in the believer	345
Agents and forms of divine incarnation in the virtues of the believer	346
The aspect of reciprocity in relation to Christ's presence in human virtues	349

CHAPTER VI. PERFORMING THE TASK OF MEDIATION

1. A three-fold spiritual development	352
The three stages of spiritual life in Maximus' predecessors	353
Maximus' use of the scheme of the three stages	355
2. Vita practica as the first element in the three-fold system	357
Πρᾶξις and θεωρία—separated and yet united by one common purpose of human life	360
3. The second element—contemplation of the nature of things	363
The concept of contemplation in Evagrius	366
Maximus and the Evagrian understanding of contemplation	368
The purpose and function of "natural contemplation"	371
A perpetual death and resurrection with Christ	374
4. The final state of union—no question of continuity. Differences between Evagrius and Maximus	377
Example one: the problem of "substantial knowledge"	377
Example two: the problem of "infinite ignorance"	382

Example three: the problem of "pure prayer"	384
Maximus' double concept of pure prayer	387
Pure prayer more than purified prayer	389
5. Another triad of spiritual development	391
6. First mediation: between the sexes	396
Male and female in some of Maximus' predecessors	396
Maximus on male and female	400
The result of the first mediation	403
7. Second mediation: between Paradise and the inhabited earth	405
A Paradise of virtues	407
Luke 23:43 and the re-establishment of Paradise	408
A new relationship to other human beings	411
The transformation of earthly pain	413
8. Third mediation: between heaven and earth	416
Likeness to the angels	416
Ascension with Christ the Incarnate	419
The "cosmic liturgy"	422
9. Fourth mediation: between intelligible and sensible creation	424
A common λόγος of all creation	426
The character of 'natural' human mediation	427
10. Fifth mediation: between God and His creation	430
The tradition of apophatic theology	432
Apophatic theology in Ps.-Denis and Evagrius	434
Maximus and the tradition of apophatic theology	436
Apophatic and Trinitarian theology in Maximus	440
The λόγος and τρόπος of mystical union	442
The concept of ecstasy in Maximus' predecessors	444
Maximus and the different types of ecstasy	448
Christology and mystical union	451
11. Deification—the purpose of human life	454
The concept of deification in the Christian tradition before Maximus	454
Maximus' doctrine of deification—a summary of his theological anthropology	456
Conclusions	460
Bibliography	465
A. Texts and translations	465
B. Literature	471
List of abbreviations	480
Index of passages	483
Index of names	496